Stories from real life

Snapstories was created to coax real-life stories out into the open. We all have these stories to tell, but it sometimes takes a bit of help to bring them out.

How does it work?

Place the story-starter cards, help cards and hour glass between you.

Deal out the “!” og “?” tokens so that each player has one of each.

Then appoint a time-keeper.

The first player draws a story card – and starts telling the first story that comes to mind. Let the card inspire you to tell a story from your own life.

The timekeeper turns the hour glass over as soon as the storyteller starts talking. Stories can last no longer than 3 minutes, and don't even have to last that long.

3 minutes

The storyteller can draw a Help card at any time during the story. These cards help to jog the memory or spur the storyteller down a new narrative path.

The listeners listen!

Lean back and enjoy the story, without commenting on it.

Save your friendly advice and your own memories until it's your turn to tell.

Lay down your "!" token when someone else has finished telling their story, and it has inspired you to tell one of your own. You can only use this token once in a game, and remember: you've only got 3 minutes.

That reminds me...

Lay down your “?” token when someone has finished their story, but you want to hear more. Maybe you'd like to know what someone looked like, or what they served for dinner. This token lets you ask about that sort of detail – but you can only use it once during a game.

Tell me more about...

Before you start playing, you'll need to agree on how many rounds you want to play or how long the game is to last. If multiple teams are playing at the same time, try breaking them up and forming new teams after two rounds. That way, you'll get to hear more people's stories.

- ★ Don't expect stories to be especially original or artistic masterpieces.
- ★ You might never have even told your story before – so just start telling and be open to the memories that come to you.
- ★ Try using your senses as you tell. Describe how the place looks and how it smells, sounds, tastes and feels.
- ★ Create a good atmosphere and refrain from small talk.
